MINNESOTA EARNS 'B' GRADE IN 2026 NATIONAL REPORT CARD ON TEACHING PERSONAL FINANCE IN HIGH SCHOOLS

State Projected to Earn 'A' Grade by 2028

DENVER—Minnesota earned a B in the 2026 National Report Card on State Efforts to Improve Financial Literacy in High Schools™, issued by the Denver-based National Endowment for Financial Education® \(NEFE®\). But the state is projected to raise its grade to an A by 2028.

NEFE is issuing this sixth report card, which reflects how well personal finance is taught in high schools. The previous five report cards were issued by the Center for Financial Literacy (CFL) at Champlain College in Burlington, Vt. The first report was issued in 2013. Beginning with this latest edition, NEFE assumes responsibility for the report card, expanding its reach and influence as a leading measure of state-level financial education policy for years to come.

“Adopting a standalone, full-semester high school personal finance graduation requirement is a vital first step in delivering effective financial education to all students,” says Billy Hensley, Ph.D., president and CEO of NEFE. “NEFE applauds Minnesota and supports educational leaders as they work to effectively implement these programs in the classroom.”

John Pelletier, senior fellow at NEFE, says Minnesota requires that high school students complete a half-credit in economics, and this course includes personal finance content. It is estimated that the personal finance content amounts to 10 hours of instruction.

Pelletier notes that a 2023 law, effective with the Class of 2028, requires that students complete a personal finance course in 10th grade, 11th grade, or 12th grade, and that teachers must have adequate training to teach the subject.

“Financial literacy education must be equitably taught to all high school students,” says Pelletier, adding that research shows a standalone personal finance course is more effective than a class that embeds these topics within an economics course. “The only way to an A grade is a standalone course required for all students.”

National Report Card Overview

Pelletier projects that when the Class of 2031 graduates, 29 states will require high school students to take a standalone personal finance course, with an estimated 73% of public high school students who graduate in 2031 taking a substantive personal finance course prior to graduation. When the first report card was issued in 2013, only three states earned an A grade, representing just 5% of students in the nation’s public schools.

“Financial literacy is linked to positive outcomes like wealth accumulation, stock market participation, effective retirement planning and avoiding high-cost alternative financial services. Conversely, poor financial literacy and negative financial behaviors often go hand in hand,” says Pelletier. “High school personal finance education can help alleviate the cycle of poverty that exists in our nation. Requiring all students to take a standalone financial literacy course, regardless of their race, ethnicity or economic status, is an important step our nation can take toward reducing inequality.”

A 2025 nationwide opinion poll from NEFE found that 83% of U.S. adults believe the state they live in should require a semester- or year-long course focused on personal finance as a graduation requirement, while 82% of respondents who attended high school say they wish they were required to complete a personal finance class while they were in school.

“NEFE’s data reflect strong public support for financial education in high school. The vast majority of Americans agree their state should require a semester- or year-long course for graduation, and that personal finance is equally as important as core subjects like math, science and English. Furthermore, most Americans believe the quality of their financial life would be better had they received financial education in school,” Hensley adds.

To produce the report card, NEFE conducted detailed reviews of high school graduation requirements, state academic standards for personal finance education, and laws, regulations and guidelines related to how each state delivers personal finance education in its public high schools.
